John Paul II ...

Have no fear! The power of Christ's cross and resurrection is greater than all evil, from which one might recoil. Christ after his resurrection said to the apostles and the women: "Do not be afraid!" These words are needed today perhaps more than ever. It is necessary to have confidence that there is One who holds the destiny of this passing world. And that someone is Love ...

Only he can fully give meaning to the words "Do not be afraid!"

FROM THE DESK OF BISHOP ESTERKA

Dear Friends of our Czech Mission in California

I write these lines the day before leaving on a missionary trip to Australia, where we also have several of our centers. My first stop will be in Sydney, where I will meet Slovak immigrants as well as Czechs in church next Sunday. As you may know in Australia we have had only one older priest, Capuchin Fr. Hrdina, who was sent on missions to the islands around the Philippines. Then he moved to Australia to be there for our fellow-refugees in various larger centers. He now lives in retirement at his monastery in Melbourne and several times a year celebrates Mass in Czech at our Šumava. In Australia we have been missionaries to the Czech Catholics. There were never Czech parishes, although Czech priests took turns serving there. It always worked in Australian parishes and our countrymen were appreciative. This time I meet with expatriates in Sydney at a Slovak church in the countryside, where a young Slovak priest, a former engineer in Australia, has only recently successfully completed his studies and was ordained for an Australian diocese. And he has an Australian parish, but also keeps the Slovak parish, which has a church, rectory and a large hall. His name is Fr. Petr Krigovsky, and he says Mass in Czech once a month for us, Czechs and Moravians. Incidentally, Fr. Peter also speaks excellent Czech.

Soon after my return from Australia we will have our Czech Masses here in California. The first weekend in Saturday it will be Holy Mass in San Diego and Sunday here at the Polish Center of John Paul II. The following Sunday will find me in San Francisco for our May Mass there.

Many of you were interested in my health, especially with regard to the "brain" tumor. But I would like to make that more clear. The tumor is not directly on the brain, but on the outer wrapping of the brain. Doctors such a tumor called "meningioma." The tumor is relatively small, averaging only 2.9 cm, about the size of an eyeball. It was found by chance. It is possible for such a tumor to grow to a diameter of the 7th to 8 cm. The tumor is "benign," almost surely not malignant or cancerous, and is above the left eye, where it can be said to be easily operable. After consulting with two medical specialists I have agreed to undergo surgery after my trips to Australia and the Czech Republic, where I will attend the pilgrimage and celebrations associated with the 200th anniversary of the birthday of St. John Nepomuc Neumann in Prachatice. Here in the U.S. he was at first a missionary around Niagara Falls and later became the bishop of Philadelphia, where he died of a heart attack at a relatively early age. He is credited with beginning the Catholic school system.

Saint John, pray for us!

No doubt vou remember that, as is every bishop, I was bound by canon law upon reaching the 75th year of life, to write a letter of resignation from my office, which I did. Here is the answer to my retirement letter. It was accepted, but I am being asked to continue my ministry, if no replacement is found. I guess God wants me to keep working

Your Excellency,

I wish to acknowledge your letter dated 1^{π} November 2010, along with the letter of your resignation to the Holy Father.

Prague, 23 March 2011

His Eminence Card. Marc Ouellet, the Prefect of the Congregation for Bishops, informs that your resignation has been accepted by the Holy Father on 5th of this month, with the formula "donec aliter provideatur" which foresees and allows the possibility of continuing your Ministry as a Bishop until "donec aliter provideatur".

With cordial regards and in union of prayers

Yours sincerely in Christ

believers, because we did not see soldiers ready to act in front of any other monument or church. Back to the Virgin Mary. Tradition says that the first Christian community lived here. All in all, this Church believes that Mary died in Jerusalem. However, the local community has always believed that she died here in Efes and has always celebrated August 15th as the Assumption of the Virgin Mary. It's interesting how this cottage, well big house according to our standards, was rediscovered. In the beginning of the 19th century, there lived a nun in Germany, Catherine Emmerich, who besides the gift of stigmata also had visions. Not only did she exactly describe the last place where Mary lived and eventually died, but also the events that led up to St. Thomas' discovery of her empty tomb. In the end of the 19th century, French priest Gouyet set out to find the place described by the visions, and to his great surprise, found them. After many years of doubts and debates about the authenticity of this location, all struggles were greatly rewarded by its proclamation as a place of pilgrimage by Pope Paul VI. From then on, it has been unceasingly visited by pilgrims from around the world. Not even John Paul II and Benedict XVI were any exception as well as Paul VI who blessed this rare place with his presence during his pontificate. Just in case you were ever near this area, mass is served here every Sunday at 10 am.

From here it is only a short distance to Selcuk, the place where St. John spent the last moments of his life, where there are remains of a basilica named after him and a tomb in which he is buried. The place has an atmosphere of biblical importance as it was in the surrounding area that he wrote his Gospels and Revelations. An atmosphere that is carried out in the daily readings of his text. In short- an exceptional and unforgettable place. This ended our biblical voyage and we continued on, fully immersing ourselves in worldly joys. We decided to visit the world famous hot springs in the village of Pamukkale and we hoped that they would have the same effect, possibly beautify us, the way Cleopatra hoped, whom one of the springs is named after. As far as beauty goes, I'm really not quite sure, because I can still see those wrinkles in the mirror, but as far as relaxation goes, it was wonderful. We were in desperate need of it because the drive here and back took seven hours, plus it was through villages because there is no highway, so we traveled from one red stoplight to the next. And, where there is a highway, they want an ungodly toll which they don't tell you about beforehand and which they tailor depending on their momentary mood. We wouldn't give in though. We sat by the toll collector for more than half an hour letting all the cars stuck behind us in traffic honk, until the man and his colleagues finally understood that we are no pushovers and that they have to show us some respect and especially fairness. Patience and strong nerves persevered and we proudly drove off without having to pay any unfairly demanded payments. A priceless experience, believe me!

VACATION IN TURKEY

(by Maria Peterka, continued from last issue)

We finally took off, left the European coast and, within half an hour, found ourselves in Asia. I don't know what we were expecting. Apparently some kind of shocking change in landscape, cuisine or language, because we unconsciously associate this continent with a culture whose writing resembles scattered loose leaf tea. But nothing! No surprises, no changes.

After some delicious cheese, olives, yogurt and cucumbers, we regained our strengths and ventured into the first historical city right around the corner: to Troy. To our surprise, we found it was pretty crowded. In reality, there are nine cities of Troy on top of each other. As time passed and history accumulated, city stacked on city resulted in quite a few meters of ruins both wide and deep. Understandably, the most famous is Helen's Troy; famous for the wooden horse and Peloponnesian Wars. Again the time came and we had to leave this world famous place to encounter another historical great-Aristotle. We found him in a small village Assos a few kilometers from Troy, where he founded a school of philosophy and where we were greeted by images of his ageless face beaming down on us at every step. A romantic view of the stone village made the incredible historical experience even more enchanting. After a long day full of adventures we sat down for a well deserved rest. However, it was not meant to be, because at eleven at night we were woken to the sound of prayer from the local minarets. It spread like wildfire with no chance of escape. The sound rang in our ears for a while, taking us a long time to fall back asleep. But oh, at four in the morning this pious ritual began again. I have nothing against prayer of any religion, quite the contrary, but forced prayer at such an ungodly time of night is beyond me. And from the reactions that were coming from the other houses full of tourists, I was definitely not alone. After an unexpected breakfast, eaten almost even before dawn, we ventured out through the city of Izmir all the way to the village of Guzlecamli where we settled in the hotel Faustina and couldn't wait to head out to nearby places full of biblical history. We first set out to Efes, the place from which St. Paul sent his letters. There is nothing here that would evoke the feeling of these timeless writings. There is no mention of such a great biblical persona, even though St. Paul supposedly spent three years of his life here.

That however is not the case with the Virgin Mary who lived and died in a house not 8 kilometers from Efes. She was brought here by St. John who was entrusted to care for her by Jesus himself right before his death while hanging from the cross. Right after our arrival to this interesting place, we were aware of the wonderfully peaceful atmosphere, despite the machine guns pointed straight at us. The local army is always ready to protect the pilgrims against any unrest. ⁷ It wasn't quite clear to us whether they were really meant to protect Christians
